

Children are likely to live up to what you believe of them

AYS, an after-school mentoring program, provides a safe haven for at-risk children. Many of the kids live in emotionally and physically dangerous communities. Along with tutoring and positive role models, AYS offers children the opportunity to explore their interests, including music, art, taekwando, robotics and ballet (as pictured above) and supplies them with a much needed hot meal daily. AYS runs on a shoestring budget out of a small inner-city storefront in Chicago and boasts a near 100% high school graduation rate.

AYS needs help to pay for shoes, school supplies, Internet service, bus passes, eye doctors, warm meals, rent ...
